Administrative/Biographical History:

John D. Urban, Sr., was born in 1882 in Portage, Wisconsin, and moved to Washington state as a child. His mother sent him to Seattle in order to gain more schooling. During the Klondike Gold Rush in 1897, Urban and a friend stowed away about a scow leaving Seattle for Skagway. The two did odd jobs onboard to pay their way and were given a mule as payment for their labor. The two men used the mule and a sled found on the beach to begin their own business hauling freight up the Chilkoot Trail for stampeders. Urban moved to Nome and Fairbanks in 1900 and 1906, respectively, during the gold rushes there. Urban moved to Anchorage in 1922 and began working for the Alaska Railroad as a brakeman. Urban married Edith Edlund, one of eleven children from a Matanuska Valley homesteading family, in 1926. Edlund's family originally came to Knik and constructed a five-mile wagon road to their new homestead in order to bring in the family and their equipment. The Urbans moved in 1931 to their homestead on Loop Road, a one-room log cabin, in order to help defray costs during the Great Depression. John continued his work on the Alaska Railroad, retiring as a conductor in 1944, while Edith worked as a telephone operator. John D. Urban died on December 13, 1949 in Idyllwild, California.
