Administrative/Biographical History:

Nellie J. Nash Lien was an elementary teacher at Jesse Lee Home in Seward, Alaska, circa 1927-1933. She probably arrived in Alaska when her husband began work as a dragline operator during the construction of the Alaska Railroad. She died in 1965 in Roseville, California.

Jesse Lee Home was a Methodist orphanage and boarding school which operated in Unalaska, Alaska, from 1889-1925, primarily serving children from the Aleutian Islands and the Seward Peninsula. With the onset of the influenza epidemic in the early 1910’s and 1920’s the number of orphans from Alaska Native villages increased dramatically. The Jesse Lee Home in Unalaska, as well as other mission schools, was soon overwhelmed with children. Cost and logistics of operating a school so far from supply centers in Seattle prompted the Methodist church to relocate the school from Unalaska to Seward in 1925. The new facility consisted of boys’ and girls’ dormitories, classrooms, kitchen, gymnasium, garden, and other buildings.

Jesse Lee Home's most famous resident was Benny Benson, who as a thirteen-year-old student created the winning entry for design of the Alaska flag.

Due to damage from the 1964 Alaska earthquake, the Seward Jesse Lee home was evacuated from its location and the students were housed at other facilities in Seward. The Home was relocated to Anchorage in 1966. Due to an expanded foster care system and the changing needs of the children in the state, the focus of Jesse Lee Home is now on providing mental health services, emergency shelter, and group homes to children from all of the state.
