Administrative/Biographical History:

Matthew P. "Bud" Mullaney (1890-1953) served as Commissioner of Taxation for the Territory of Alaska from circa 1942 until his death in 1953. He and his wife Nell had no children.

Dr. Flora is likely LeRoy Flora, who practiced in Anchorage for a time in the 1940s-early 1950s with his wife Gunda (1909-1996), a nurse at the Alaska Psychiatric Institute.

Scope and Content Description:

The collection consists of 500 color 35mm slides, both personal and commercially-produced, of Alaskan scenes from locations throughout the state. The majority of the personal photos were taken by Matthew and Nell Mullaney, with a small portion bearing the name "Dr. Flora" and different handwriting. Several disasters are documented, including the sinking of the Princess Kathleen (1952) and fires at Wright's Drug Store in Palmer and the Maynard hospital in Nome (1948). The images also capture local color; for example, there are four slides from Anchorage showing a black bear pulling a cart and a sled (.10-.13). The collection includes many photographs of Catholic church buildings, including the Shrine of St. Therese on Shrine Island near Juneau; Father Hubbard the "Glacier Priest" is shown at a church picnic in Wasilla. For more information, see Detailed Description of Collection.

Arrangement: Arranged into two series: 1. Personal slides. 2. Commercial slides. Personal slides loosely arranged by location. Slides with name "Dr. Flora" arranged as a group at end of personal slides. Commercial slides arranged by photographer and photo number when available.
