Administrative/Biographical History:

Ernest Gruening (1887-1974) served as the governor of Alaska from 1939-1953. He also served as an Alaskan senator from statehood, 1959, to 1969. Gruening is credited as the catalyst to statehood.¹

M. C. “Rusty” Heurlin was born in Kristianstad, Sweden, to American parents and was raised in Massachusetts, where he took art classes at the Fenway School of Illustration in Boston. Though he arrived in Valdez, Alaska, in 1916, he served in WWI in Europe and afterward spent time in Westport, Connecticut, working for New York magazines before returning to the Fairbanks area in 1924. He settled in Ester until his death in 1986. Heurlin favored Alaska Natives as artistic subjects and spent four whaling seasons in Barrow, where he learned about the Inupiaq culture he went onto document in his painting career. Heurlin received an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree from the University of Alaska in 1971.²

Marvin R. “Muktuk” Marston (1889-1980) was born in Tyler, Washington. He worked as a long-shoreman at Nome in 1906, then enlisted in the Illinois National Guard in 1910, where he served for 3 years. Marston then worked “in brokerage, insurance, land development and petroleum search in the Midwest, California, Michigan, New York and Pennsylvania.” In 1941, he was commissioned to serve as major in the Army Air Corps and was stationed in Alaska, where he focused on recruiting Indigenous Alaskans into the Alaska Territorial Guard. Marston gained the “nickname ‘Muktuk’” in a contest with a village chief. Marston then served as a delegate to the Alaska Constitutional Convention in 1956.³

Lawrence “Larry” F. O’Brien was appointed in 1961 by President Kennedy to serve as the special assistant to the president for congressional relations and personnel. He also managed President Kennedy’s activities in 1962 on behalf of the Democratic Party during its election campaigns. O’Brien continued to work as the special assistant for President Johnson after Kennedy’s assassination, per the President’s request, until 1965, when he was appointed the U.S. Postmaster General.⁴
