Name of creator(s): Diliara Safaralievna

Administrative/Biographical History:

In the mid-1990s, Diliara Xanym Safaralievna, head of the Graphics Department of the Scientific-Research Museum of the Academy of Arts in Leningrad, wrote an article on Russian artist Mikhail Tikhanov for the Anchorage Museum's exhibition catalog, Russian America: the forgotten frontier.¹ Museum staffer Mina Jacob translated the article from Russian into English for publication. Subsequently, Safaralievna contacted Jacob for assistance in translating a longer manuscript on Tikhanov into English for the University of Washington Press. Apparently, the book was never published.

Mikhail Tikhonovich Tikhanov (1789-1862) studied historical painting at the Academy of Art in St. Petersburg. In 1817, he sailed with V.M. Golovnin on the Kamchatka; during the expedition, he made at least 43 sketches, including 19 extant sketches of Alaskan peoples and scenes.

Scope and Content Description:

The collection consists of several versions of Safaralievna's manuscript on Mikhail Tikhanov, including fifty images intended as illustrations.
