Administrative/Biographical History:

This collection depicts the Alaskan activities of Edward Coke Hill. Born January 18th, 1866, he was the son of William Lair Hill (1838-1924), an attorney, historian, and newspaper editor who codified Oregon laws between 1882 and 1887.¹ William Hill married Julia Hall Chandler, and Edward was one of their four children.² Like his father, Edward Hill became a lawyer in both Alaska and San Francisco, California. He was a federal judge in the third judicial district of Alaska, appointed in 1927 and again in 1931.³

Scope and Content Description: The collection contains 146 print photographs and 12 negatives, primarily depicting Fairbanks and surrounding areas. Snapshots and commercial photographs are included, all of which are in black and white or sepia. Special attention in the collection is paid to documenting architecture, wildlife, dog teams, and Yukon scenery. Some photographs depict Native Alaskan peoples of the area. The collection includes photographs of President Harding's visit to Fairbanks, in which he drove a golden spike into the new railroad bridge crossing the Tanana River at Nenana.

Arrangement: Arranged by format
