TITLE: Lane Family Photograph Collection

COLLECTION NUMBER: B2011.014

OVERVIEW OF THE COLLECTION

Dates: 1910-1946

Extent: 394 items, one linear foot

Language and Scripts: The collection is in English

Names of creators: Max Manger, Strye Photo Studio, P.S. Hunt, G. McCreary

Administrative/biographical history:

This collection may contain unrelated groups of photos. Several photo processing envelopes containing negatives are from Fairbanks photo studios and have the name "Lane" penciled on them, and two postal envelopes were addressed to Harry or Mrs. Lane [see Box 2, Folder 5, "Ephemera"]. Harry Lee Lane, born July 1, 1887 on Prince Edward Island, Canada, came to Alaska in 1916 and worked as a timekeeper for the Alaska Railroad in Anchorage.¹ He enlisted in the Canadian Army and lost both legs during World War I in France. He returned to Anchorage and the railroad and then spent 1925 and 1926 working for the Fairbanks Exploration Company in Fairbanks. Many of the photos in this collection are apparently from this period in the Interior. Harry and his wife Eleanor Emma Lane owned the Pioneer Hotel (see .9) in Fairbanks at some point, left Alaska, and returned in the 1930s.² In Anchorage, the Lanes purchased the Crescent Hotel [see .101 and .106] at Fourth Avenue and C Street in 1933, renaming it the Lane Hotel in 1939. Harry Lane retired from business in 1951 and died in Anchorage in 1956. According to Eleanor Lane's obituary the couple left no surviving relatives.

It is unknown what connection, if any, there was between the Lanes and Mrs. Myrtle Lane, who lived in Fairbanks before coming to Anchorage where she managed the Dahl Rooms.³ A caption on the back of .29 mentions "Myrtle." Photos .111 and .12 are associated with Oscar Dahl who ran a hotel in Seward.⁴ A postcard (.111) sent in 1922 from Dahl to Eleanor E. Nelson in Fairbanks may show a connection, although Eleanor Lane was presumably married to Harry at the time and Eleanor Nelson may be another person. A 1944 wedding portrait of a young couple (.274) is inscribed with the Lane Hotel name. Perhaps this photo collection was found in the hotel? The Lane Hotel burned in September 1966 and fourteen people died in an arson fire that caused the most fire fatalities in Anchorage's history⁵. Lane Street in Mountain View is named for Harry Lane⁶.

Scope and content description:

The collection consists of black-and-white photographic prints and negatives. Most photos are of individuals or groups in outdoor Interior Alaskan settings, engaged in activities such as fishing, camping, mining, and travelling by automobile or river steamer. Few individuals are identified by full name. There are good photos of Athapascan bark canoes at a summer fish camp (.126-.129). A few photos are of Anchorage, including boats at the mouth of Ship Creek. Box 2, Folder 3 contains family photos that were taken outside Alaska; again, most individuals are not identified with full names.
