Administrative/Biographical History:

Darrell Wood served on the U.S.S. Citrus as a non-commissioned officer in the United States Coast Guard. The U.S Coast Guard Cutter Citrus was a Cactus (A)-class seagoing buoy tender. During World War II, the ship helped build LORAN stations on the Aleutian Islands. Beginning in November 1943, men and materials were transported to Sitka, Amchitka, and Attu. The Citrus also transported Coast Guard construction crews to erect Quonset huts for Construction Detachment "A" at Massacre Bay, Attu, and at Baxter Cove, Adak. In February 1944, the Citrus was stationed at Ketchikan. The ship spent the remainder of the war conducting aids to navigation, logistics, and vessel escort duties in Alaskan waters. From 1945 to 1979, the Citrus continued to maintain aids to navigation in Alaskan waters.¹

Scope and Content Description:

The collection consists of one album with a decorative "Alaska" eagle cover, measuring 10 ¼ x 13 ¼", containing 737 mostly black-and-white photographs (one tinted, .228) and real photo
