

Dog Team Subject Guide

Compiled by Joe Jessup McDermott, William E. Davis Internship

Compiled 2017

Updated by Chloe Nielsen, Archivist, 2022

This guide is intended to assist researchers in locating archival materials pertaining to the use of sled dogs in Alaska, housed at the Atwood Resource Center of the Anchorage Museum. It is not necessarily a complete listing of all dog team-related holdings. Please contact ARC staff at resourcecenter@anchagemuseum.org or 907- 929-9235 for assistance in locating other collections of interest.

Using this Guide

Throughout the North, dogs and dog teams were a fundamental aspect of travel, hunting, and life for Indigenous peoples and explorers and settlers alike. Traditionally, dog teams were used by Indigenous peoples in the Circumpolar North throughout the winter months. Some of the most successful Arctic and Antarctic explorers learned from Indigenous teachers and imitated this practice of using dog teams, such as Knud Rasmussen's use of dogs to traverse the Inuit world from Greenland to Alaska in the Fifth Thule Expedition [Across Arctic America: Narrative of the Fifth Thule Expedition, Knud Rasmussen]. Early settlers in Alaska relied on a mix of different sledding animals native to Alaska, including dogs, or imported from elsewhere. Along with railways, dog teams were essential for the delivery of mail in Territorial Alaska until the introduction of reliable air travel in the 1930s [On Time Delivery: The Dog Team Mail Carriers, William Schneider]. Alaska has had a long history of dog team racing, beginning with the All-Alaska Sweepstakes in Nome beginning from 1908-1917, and the Fur Rendezvous and Iditarod Races in more modern times. The current day Iditarod Race was inspired by the 1925 Nome Serum run, in which relay teams of men and dogs carried serum to combat a diphtheria outbreak among the Indigenous people in Nome. Mail carriers, racers, and Alaska Native people alike participated in this relay, including All-America Sweepstakes winner Leonhard Seppala and his dogs Togo and Balto [The Cruellest Miles : The Heroic Story of Dogs and Men in a Race Against an Epidemic]. While use of dog teams in the modern day is generally restricted to recreational racing, and they were replaced by the 'Iron Dog,' (Snow-machines) in Alaskan villages in the 1960s and 1970s, they nonetheless represent a vitally important part of Alaskan history, Native and non-Native alike.

The images listed below illustrate the use of sled dogs in Alaska. The collections are ordered by accession number. In addition, a list of books pertaining to dog teams from the Atwood Resource Center library has been included at the end of this guide. If any problematic or sensitive content is discovered while using this guide, please contact ARC staff with the contact information above.

and roll film negatives and transparencies in a variety of sizes, on nitrate, acetate, and polyester film bases. The images are primarily black-and-white, with some color negatives (1870.1a-5a, 2062, 2070, 2334) and transparencies (2308-2309, 2324, 2332-2333, 2047.3.11). There are also 42 35mm color slides, most circa 1960s. Some of the negatives have corresponding print photographs in various sizes. There are also several hundred prints without negatives, only one in color (.2664). The subjects, locations, and time periods documented in the collection are wide-ranging. Many of the photographs chronicle business and daily life in Anchorage, especially on Fourth Avenue. Of particular note are Matanuska Colony photographs taken for the first annual report on the colony, documenting agriculture and homesteading in the valley in the 1930s. Other major subjects include early aviation and mining, with several hundred photographs of the Gold Zone and Hatcher Pass area mines. Notably absent (or unidentified is much early work by Lu Liston), his World War II-era work in Juneau and Anchorage is represented by only a handful of prints (2777 et seq.).

Tisdell White Mountain Government School Collection, B2002.011

White Mountain was established on the site of the Inupiat fish camp called Nutchirviq. The town grew after an influx of prospectors during the gold rush of 1900. A government-subsidized orphanage was built at White Mountain, and was converted to an industrial school in 1926. A post office was opened in 1932. The city government was incorporated in 1969. Nothing was known about the creator of the album at the time of processing. Based on the image captions, it is likely that the creator was a teacher at the White Mountain school who traveled up the Inside Passage to reach Alaska. Several images are signed with the initials "V.B." and one with the surname "Burlingame." This is Victor Burlingame. The collection consists of 258 black-and-white photographs and three photomechanical prints mounted on album pages. The images primarily depict students and activities at the government school in White Mountain.
